Marni Rabin-Marron is a staunch and life-long advocate for people with disabilities. Deaf since birth, she is thus accustomed to advocating for herself and others. As a result of her own experiences, personal and professional, she is comfortable navigating her own path and empowering others to face their challenges with fresh eyes.

With an 'outside-the-box' approach, she is able to identify problems and creatively generate sound solutions and opportunities for people in all-too-often neglected communities. She intuitively sees the more granular elements of complex problems and uses her skills to build community, inviting others to be part of the solution. Over the course of several decades Rabin-Marron has brought people together both professionally and socially, shining a spotlight on their strengths, thus expanding their vistas and driving goal-based objectives. She is an inspirational leader with a extensive experience in networking for the purpose of helping others realize their vision.

Respected as a credible voice in creating opportunities, Marni worked with both businesses and corporations to sculpt a job description which benefitted them as well as the disabled job seeker, thus creating not only a win-win but also a synergistic outcome.

Marni credits her former supervisor and mentor Richard Manley, past Executive Director for the Westchester County Office for the Disabled, for inspiring her. He indelibly impressed upon her the value of humor as a powerful tool and great deflector to help others feel more comfortable being around a person with a disability.

Marni is active in her community as an activist and organizer and helps others to engage themselves civically through community education. She is a former VP of her School District's PTA. She began her career as a paralegal which sensitized her even further to the challenges disabled people face in the marketplace as clients, and in the workplace as employees.

Marni was raised in Yonkers, graduating from The Masters School in Dobbs Ferry before earning her bachelor's degree in Communications from the College at Brockport, State University of New York. Marni lives in Yorktown with her incredible husband, Tom, and their wonderful son, a high school student and Boy Scout.
